Access Affices Having been for some time past very inteh afflicted with a severe cold, and almost constant cough; and having tried various remedies, syrups, &c., and all to no effect, I was induced by my esteemed friend, W. W. Wallace, of this city, to make a trial of R. E. Sellers Cough Syrup, I did so, and to my great surprise, I received almost immediate relief. It was with the greatest difficulty that Disclured before my respective classes, but on taking a spoonful of the Syrup, Just before entering my lecture room, I could speak would particularly recommend it to clergymen, lawyers, and other public speakers.

ty,—and 2d, that although the "bonds cannot be taxed" the Banks can:

"A State tax cannot be laid upon the bonds in the hands of actual holders.—But is a stockholder in a national bank in any strict and proper sense an owner of these bonds? This question is easily answered by an inquiry into the nature of his shares. They are a sort of what is called, in legal parlance, choose in action; they merely entitle their holder to a distributive proportion of the profits or dividends of the bank.

The holders no more own the property of the bank than do its creditors and bill-holders; nor indeed so much; for if the bank is compelled to wind up its affairs, the claims of its creditors must first be satisfied, and what is left, if anything, is then divided among the stockholders. The bank, as body corporate, ownes the United States Stocks in which it has invested, as it does its other property; but its creditors do not own it; though both have claims which the bank is under obligations to meet.

To the one the bank must pay its debts as they become due—the claims for dividends being always subordinate to the claims for debts.—
Now if ownership of the prior and paramount claim against the bank carries with it no exemption ground taxation, how can the ownership of the residuary and subordinate claim?

Why, then, if a man owns fifty thouse.

Now if ownership of the prior and paramount claim against the bank carries with it no exemption a from taxation, how can the ownership of the residuary and subordinate claim?

Why, then, if a man owns fifty thousand dollars of the shares of a national carries whith it property be thought exempt from taxation on the ground of his ownership of the federal stocks which the bank holds, when the share the claims of its creditors are satisfied?

Life in North Carolina—Some Striking Statements.

The Southern traveling correspondent of the Boston Advertiser writes from Wilmington, North Carolina, as follows:

"The amount of tobacco consumed by the people is beyond all calculation. I hardly exaggerate in saying that at least seven-tenths of all persons above the age of twelve years use it in some form. Nearly every man and boy smokes or cleave, and very many of them do both, while the country women of all classes dip. When I will be all claims of the story about his famous bar! O' apple sass,' I thought the manner in which he disposes of his guid of tobacco the nastiest piece of business I should aver see I was and some of the country of business the should aver see I was a carried to the couveraince or interest of the residuary dividends, being always and subordinate claim to residuary dividends, or to the residuary dividends, or to hair?"

To my answer that there was not, he replied, "Then, why do you wear that thing on it?"
I said it, kept my hair out of the way.
"But," he added," "do you know how old it makes you look? A gentleman, speaking of you but yesterday, thought you were fifty. He was surprised when I said you could not be more than thirty."

I said you could not be more than thirty."

Ikuew before that my tollette was a success. One whose business with me referred simply to the contents of the skull could never imagine its covering was intended to challenge admiration. It was necessary, one evening, I should remain in the office until near midnight. As I left the room, where were some eight or ten editors, reporters, proof-readers and clerks, he simply nodded his good night. A sub-editor, whose wife was my friend, got his hat, and bowing, remarked:

"Since our senior resigned his privilege, will you permit he to see you safely home?"

The senior drew himself up to his full height of six feet four, and looking down at the kind little mair said, sternly—

"I want it understood that Mrs.—'s relations in this office are purely those of business, and that when sha requires

"I want it understood that Mrs.—'s relations in this office are purely those of bustices, and that when she requires anything of any one in it she will command his services. She has not commanded mine, and the fact that she has kept her servant here all the ovening to attend here home, should be sufficient notice that she required no other escort."

This fixed my status. For ten years I came and went at will, and think I was never in the way. The men folk and I had a tacit understanding that they should not swear in my presence; but if they forgot I was dead, and some little act of kindness was the apology. Otherwise than this, I think it seldom occurred to any one of them that I was not one of them. This may appear unwomanly, but I insist that if women are to be the companions of men in public employment, the idea of sex must not be the prevailing thought of their livos. They must establish business relations, and keep them purely and entirely business relations.
